QUESTION PRESENTED

I. Apprendi v. New Jersey is retroactive to Eric Wayne's Motion to Vacate because it announced a watershed rule of law and the Eighth Circuit erred when it granted the United States' Motion to dismiss:

A. Mr. Wayne is litigating his first, properly amended 2255 petition.

B. All elements of a crime must be decided by a properly instructed jury utilizing the standard of beyond-a-reasonable-doubt.

C. Weight is an element of drug offenses which was contained in his indictment but was not proven to his jury, rather the determination was made solely by the trial court.

D. Eric Wayne's jury was specifically forbidden from considering the weight of the controlled substance by instruction from the Court.

Mr. Wayne presented unrefuted evidence of governmental misconduct–such as Governmental manipulation of Brady v. Maryland and of the discovery process–as well as ineffective assistance of counsel issues for which certificate of appealability was wrongfully denied by the Eighth Circuit. See, (Appendix 1a).

Rule 31 Verdict

The verdict shall be unanimous . . .

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. Proceedings Below

We are before this Court because the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit granted the Government's Motion to Dismiss Mr. Wayne's appeal taken from the denial of his properly amended first Motion to Vacate. (Appendix 1a)

The Magistrate Judge had previously found that: Apprendi v. New Jersey, 530 U.S. 466 (2000) (Apprendi) applied, Wayne had properly amended his petition, Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288 (1989) (Teague) did not apply but that if it did Mr. Wayne's case fell under both exceptions thereto. He recommended that Mr. Wayne's sentence be vacated and that a sentence under Section C of Title 21 U.S.C. § 841 be imposed. He recommended denial without evidentiary hearing on the other grounds alleged.

No evidentiary hearing was held by the Magistrate Judge nor the District Judge, although oral argument was permitted and various written submissions were made.

The District Court upheld that portion of the Magistrate's finding denying an evidentiary hearing but denied Mr. Wayne's Apprendi claim. However, it sua sponte, issued a Certificate of Appealability on the Apprendi issue. A timely Notice of Appeal was filed. A further request for Certificate of Appealability on the remaining issues was first submitted to the trial court and later to the Court of Appeals. Both courts denied relief.

B. Statement of Relevant Facts

Mr. Wayne was sentenced to a period of incarceration of 300 months' time (Appendix 6a -12a) although the determination of the sentence was arrived at solely by a trial judge and the jury was specifically instructed not to consider weight of the drugs even though the amount of drugs was indicated in the Indictment. (Appendix 2a-4a).

Additional facts relevant to the issues before this Court are set out in their respective portions of Reasons for Granting the Writ.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

Mr. Wayne will divide this presentation into two distinct portions: the first will reflect the general state of the law post-Apprendi and the second will discuss why an Apprendi error is cognizable in a Motion to Vacate.

A. Introdudction

Mr. Wayne filed his first and only 2255 petition in 1997 and was granted leave to amend that petition to include his position that his case fit squarely within the parameters of Apprendi.

His appeal to the Eighth Circuit was dismissed based upon that court's holding in United States v. Moss, infra.

He asks the logical question: If drug quantity is now firmly established as an element of the drug trafficking statutes,[1] and as such the Government must prove the quantity before a unanimous jury for those at the trial stage; and if those currently at the appellate stage of their proceedings will have their sentences reviewed under Apprendi, how can those who properly raised this issue in their first 2255 petition be told that they have no recourse when Apprendi created a watershed change in the law?

Although nearly 2500 cases have cited to Apprendi at this time in the federal courts alone, courts across the land are in discord on the important issue of whether Apprendi issues may be raised in first petitions submitted under 28 U.S.C. § 2255. The fact that only three Circuits.[2] have directly spoken to the issue does not recognize the disagreement which is evident in lower court decisions. In other words, this is a critically important and divisive issue and must be addressed by this Court.

It is apparent that this Court is attempting to address the many and varied interpretations of Apprendi by the various courts. It has accepted Certiorari and heard argument on the applicability of Apprendi to Title 18 U.S.C. § 924(c) and to Title 21 U.S.C. §841(b)(1); and will soon hear argument on an Arizona death penalty matter. This issue of retroactivity to pending § 2255 petitions is of equal constitutional importance.

It seems as if the lower courts are parsing out in their respective reasoning "categories" of Apprendi litigants.

[1]The Government concedes as it must that after Apprendi its Indictments must charge threshold drug quantities and must establish those quantities beyond a reasonable doubt to a trial jury. See, cases gathered on this proposition in the original appellate decision to be found at United States v. Cotton, 255 F. 3d 150 (4th Cir 2001).

[2]United States v. Moss, 252 F. 3d 993 (8th Cir. 2001); United States v. Sanchez-Cervantes, 282 F.3d 664 (9th Cir. 2002); United States v. Sanders, 247 F.3d 139 (4th Cir. 2001; and McCoy v. United States, 266 F.3d 1245 (11th Cir. 2001).

A. Those filing their second, third 2255 motion;

B. Those attempting to circumvent 2255 strictures by filing under Title 28 U.S.C. § 2241;

C. Those individuals who were denied the right to amend their pending petitions;

D. Those on direct appeal;

E. Newly convicted individuals.

Some of the distinctions being made include:

1. Whether the defendant pled guilty

2. Whether the sentence imposed was in excess of the statutory maximum;

3. Whether the Indictment contained specific allegations of quantity of contraband;

4. Whether the jury was instructed on the issue of quantity or weight or, as in Mr. Wayne's case, whether the jury was specifically ordered not to consider weight;

5. Whether the defendant articulated an "elements" argument before or after Jones and Apprendi.

6. Whether a plain error or a noticed error analysis should apply–which includes reference to the lack of weight of the evidence such as in ths case–and whether sentences above 240 months' incarceration are per se plain error.

7. Whether an Apprendi error divests the sentencing court of jurisdiction; and

8. Whether Apprendi applies to guideline calculations and enhancements.

This non-exhaustive list speaks to the urgency with which this Court should address issues such as Mr. Wayne's.

It must be noted that the cases speaking to other facets of the Apprendi question do not inform this Court's decision whether to review Mr. Wayne's case. He is in the unique position of presenting his initial 2255 to the Court; having that trial Court permit him to amend his claim to include Apprendi. His position is also starkly different from the routine: his jury was informed of approximate quantities in the Indictment yet was forbidden to consider weight.

In pertinent part Jury Instruction Number 13 read:

> ...The United States is not required to prove that the amount or quantity of cocaine and marijuana was as charged in the Indictment. It need only prove beyond a reasonable doubt that there was a measurable amount of cocaine and/or marijuana as charged in each respective count. (Appendix 5a)

This instruction was given in spite of the fact that the Government was well aware of the importance of weight to its ultimate goal of lengthy incarceration. Between its initial Indictment filed May 19, 1988 and its Superceding Indictment filed August 24, 1988 it amended not only the dates of certain counts but also its "approximation" of the weights of controlled substances involved.

B. No Constitutionally Valid Conviction Can Be Obtained Nor Sentence Imposed When the Government Fails to Establish the Element of Quantity Before the Petit Jury Beyond a Reasonable Doubt.

Apprendi v. New Jersey[3] Mandates Such a Result and it Is Required That this Watershed Change in the Law and Practice of Federal Courts Be Given Retroactive Application to Those Whose § 2255 Petitions Were Pending at the Time That Apprendi Was Decided.

Mr. Wayne's jury was put in the unenviable position of being presented with approximations of the quantities of controlled substance and forbidden from considering that quantity. He was convicted of a crime by virtue of the Government being relieved of its duty to present evidence beyond a reasonable doubt on all elements of the crime. He was sentenced on no more than a guess at estimated drug quantity.

Preclusion of an essential element of the crime from the jury's consideration

This is a simple case based upon a simple concept. Substantive Constitutional law provides that a ll elements of a crime must be proven to a jury. No judge can supplant the wisdom of the jury by, essentially, taking 'judicial notice' of a fact necessary to establish the conviction.

Prior to Apprendi, courts uniformly relegated quantity of controlled substances to a judicial determination. This was true under pre-guideline law and was expanded under the Guidelines. Since Apprendi, quantity is universally seen as an element rather than an issue for sentencing. This watershed change in the law should be applied to § 2255 litigants.

Apprendi, supra forbids the trial court from usurping the role of a petit jury. No citizen may be convicted of a crime unless a jury has found adversely to him on every element of the crime for which he is accused. All Circuits which have addressed the issue have found that, under Apprendi, quantity of a controlled substance is an element of federal drug offenses.

[3]530 U.S. 466 (2000).

Stirone v. United States, 361 U.S. 212 (1960) is instructive. Stirone granted relief when proof at trial on an essential element departed from the manner of the allegation. Here we have a situation where an element of the crime is knowingly kept from the petit jury's consideration and then "found" by the trial court.

When a court is faced with such a situation it must either grant acquittal or a new trial depending on the factual circumstances. In no case may it take judicial notice of or substitute its judgment on a missing element.

See, for instance, United States V. Martin Linen Supply Co. Et Al. 430 U.S. 564 (1977) and Beem v. McKune, 278 F.3d 1108 (10th Cir. 2002). Discussion infra.

C. Requirement of an Indictment which contains all elements of the crime and a unanimous jury were breached in this case.

It is clear that the Constitution as well as Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure require that all federal crimes be tried by Indictment unless the defendant waives such right; the trial court approves; and the Government consents. It is equally clear that a conviction can only be obtained upon an adverse finding on all elements of the crime by the fact finder–in Mr. Wayne's case the jury. F.R. Crim. P. 31.

Here, Mr. Wayne's Indictment was flawed as it only "approximated" a quantity of drugs, and he was denied a jury trial on the element of quantity, hence his conviction cannot stand for these reasons alone.

It is clear that the Due Process Clause protects "the accused against conviction except upon proof beyond a reasonable doubt of every fact necessary to constitute the crime . . . In re Winship, 397 U.S. 358, 364 (1970). Quantity is necessary to underlay a conviction under either Title 21 U.S.C. §§ 841(b)(1)(A) or (b)(1)(B). This element was not submitted to the jury, hence not every fact necessary to constitute the crime was established by a jury.

Compliance with Winship protects a defendant's interest in being free from unjustified loss of liberty; from the stigmatization resulting from conviction; and it engenders community confidence in the criminal law by giving "concrete substance" to the presumption of innocence. Id., at 363-364.

It Constitutionally follows that the Government at trial must establish each of the elements beyond a reasonable doubt, and then, and only then, can a conviction or sentence be based upon these findings.

This public perception component of due process cannot be overemphasized. Not only must we do justice, we must appear to do justice. It would be a rare member of the public indeed who, after being told that all elements of a crime must be proven to a jury beyond a reasonable doubt and further told that one element was not submitted to the jury, would conclude that the conviction could stand. Common sense dictates otherwise.

D. A trial court may not take judicial notice of a missing element.

Clearly the failure to submit an element to the jury could be easily "overlooked" if the trial court had the ability to substitute its own judgment for that of the jury. This substitution of the court's judgment for that of the grand and petit juries is exactly what is proposed when courts uphold the omission of an element because, for instance, "no rational jury could fail to find" certain quantities.

The Tenth Circuit recently held, in Beem v. McKune, 278 F.3d 1108 (10th Cir. 2002) that, despite the ease with which the particular trial court could "fill in" the missing element from "common knowledge," taking judicial notice of any element of a crime was prohibited.

The Tenth Circuit framed the issue as "whether [the defendants] may be sentenced and imprisoned for crimes for which they were not charged, tried or convicted." Id., at 1109. The two defendants in these separate cases were tried, inter alia, for indecent liberties with a child and aggravated assault as to Beem and rape as to Henson.

After success on appeal, the Kansas courts remanded both Beem's and Henson's cases for resentencing on a different crime–aggravated incest. The State argued that the sentences were proper because the primary elements of due process were met–notice and an opportunity to defend and that the element of relationship with the child was at that time undisputed.

In its analysis, that Court reasoned that the defendants "were indicted under charges that did not include all necessary elements of aggravated incest. Additionally, Defendants did not proffer a defense regarding the missing elements and their juries were not instructed as to all elements . . . The only conceivable way we can permit [the sentences] to stand is to take judicial notice of the essential element of kinship–an impermissible endeavor." Id., at 1112.

The instant case is analogous. Mr. Wayne was tried on a charge which the trial court ruled was complete. Now it is apparent that an element was missing which was not submitted to the jury and decided by them. The court is not now free to substitute its judgment for that of the jury.

It is respectfully suggested that Mr. Wayne's conviction on a faulty Indictment should not stand. However, if sentencing is found to be appropriate, it must be to a period calculated based upon what the jury actually found: a quantity of controlled substance, to wit marijuana.

See Count 5, Indictment, (Appendix 2a-4a). Since both marijuana and cocaine are included in the indictment and since both were contained in the jury instruction, it is respectfully submitted that the Rule of Lenity requires imposition of sentence only on the marijuana accusation.

E. Omission of an essential element of the crime divests the sentencing court of jurisdiction to impose a sentence except under the lowest non-designated amount or in the alternative creates structural error.

1. Absence of jurisdiction

Although Courts of Appeal which have considered this issue in the context of direct appeals have taken the position that failure to submit quantity to a petit jury is error, they have not found it to be structural error. Mr. Wayne disagrees.

We are guided by this Court's decision in Arizona v. Fulminante, 499 U.S. 279 (1991). It teaches that if the error affects the very framework in which a trial proceeds, reversal is automatic.

In a recent discussion in the dissent to United States v. Benehaley, 281 F.3d 423 (4th Cir. 2002), Judge Luttig opined that the reasoning of United States v. Promise, 255 F.3d 150 (4th Cir. 2001)(en banc), "leads inexorably to the conclusion that the actual convictions under section 841, and not merely the sentences imposed . . . are invalid, whenever merely 'a quantity' of controlled substance is charged in the underlying indictment. Id., at 426

Judge Luttig continues that utilizing Title 21 U.S.C. Section 841(b)(1)(C) as a catch all is incorrect. "...it follows that an indictment that alleges only 'a quantity' of the drug in question does not charge a section 841 offense at all." Id.

II. United States v. Moss, supra, incorrectly applied Teague v. Lane.

There exists no question but that drug quantity is an element of a drug trafficking crime.[4] If quantity were removed from the matrix of Mr. Wayne's sentencing, he could receive no greater than a twenty year guideline sentence. This Apprendi error increases his guideline sentence by five years' time.

Although we do not have the benefit of the Government's positions on the issues which were to be raised in the appeal, we do know that they rely in their Motion to Dismiss Appeal on the fact that the Circuit decided Moss, supra. Presumably from that flows the position that Teague v. Lane, 489 U.S. 288 (1989) forecloses Mr. Wayne's relief. That position is incorrect.

A. Apprendi creates a new rule of substantive law, therefore Teague does not apply.

Teague does not foreclose collateral relief. Teague distinguishes between a new constitutional rule "of criminal procedure" and a change in substantive law. Although it is true that the holding in Apprendi is new, it is most certainly not one of criminal procedure but rather one of new substantive law; much as the new rule announced in Bailey v. United States, 516 U.S. 137 (1995) which was applied on collateral review in Bousley v. United States, 523 U.S. 614 (1998).

Bousley noted that the distinction between substance and procedure is particularly important in the context of a habeas petitioner. Here the fact that Mr. Wayne elected a jury

[4]See, for instance, United States v. Thomas, 274 F.3d 655 (2nd Cir. 2001)(en banc), and the cases cited therein, including United States v. Promise, 255 F.3d 150 (4th Cor. 2001)(en banc); United States v Strayhorn, 250 F.3d 462 (6th Cir. 2001); United States v. Fields, 242 F.3d 393 (D.C. Cir.) Clarified on reh'g 251 F. 3d 1041 (D.C. Circuit 2001); United States v. Hishaw, 235 F. 3d 565 (10th Cir. 2000), cert denied 150 L.Ed.2d 241; 121 S. Ct. 2254 (2001); United States v. Doggett, 230 F.3d 160 (5th Cir. 2000), cert denied, 531 U.S. 1177 (2001); United States v. Rogers, 228 F. 3d 1318 (11th Cir 2000), abrogated on other grounds by United States v. Sanchez, supra, and United States v. Nordby, 225 F. 3d 1053 (9th Cir. 2000).

trial and that he was sentenced based upon facts found only by a judge speaks to the substantive failure of the trial rather than a procedural failure.

Consideration of what was at issue in Bousley and what is at issue in the present case is instructive. The Bousley court teaches that habeas corpus itself exists, in primary part, "to assure that no man has been incarcerated under a procedure which creates an impermissibly large risk that the innocent will be convicted." Bousley , at 620. (Citations omitted).

B. Innocence of crimes for which he was sentenced.

Another facet of this problem has been largely ignored by the courts in their consideration of the issue of retroactivity of Apprendi. The cases stress that actual innocence is the cornerstone of consideration.

However, the cases relied upon for this proposition by and large pre-date the Sentencing Guidelines. Pre Guidelines there was no fact finding by the trial court which required certain placement of a defendant on a sentencing grid. The judge was free to consider any evidence; he was not fettered by required minimum mandatory sentences; nor was he restricted by guideline calculations.

Sentencing Guidelines, as any practitioner knows, create a second mini-trial. Cases discussing only absolute factual innocence of any offense leave out what is in a practical sense the most important thing to the defendant: the length of his sentence, and makes that the subject of a second trial with separate, hearsay evidence which does not have to be established beyond a reasonable doubt.

What Apprendi wrought is a shifting of what facts may be considered at which "trial." Since it is patent that the fact of quantity of drugs must be considered at the first-jury-trial, no sentence over 240 months may stand.

In other words, if "actual innocence" is to be the cornerstone of consideration, then it must be conceded that the defendant who receives a sentence under Title 21 USC 841(b), when the government is not put to its proof of the factors which enhanced the sentence, is innocent of the enhancements.

The Magistrate Judge in Mr. Wayne's case recognized this fact and considered Bousley and Reed v. Ross, 468 U.S. 1 (1984), and, after reviewing the record found that "Wayne could not have been expected to raise a claim in his initial petition [discussing the permitted amended petition] for which no legal basis existed at the time the petition was filed...and is excusable [at any rate] because to allow the amendment would result in a fundamental miscarriage of justice."

One cannot escape the similarities between the "active employment" element in Bailey and the "drug quantity" element after Apprendi. It is patently clear that Bailey redefined what conduct constituted the offense, Apprendi actually results in the conclusion that there are many "crimes" defined by § 841, hence to hold Mr. Wayne to the most punitive of those enumerated crimes is to permit him to stand convicted of a crime for which no jury returned a verdict.

In other words, assuming arguendo that this is not a question of absolute innocence, there is at least innocence of the two crimes which Apprendi rationale requires, that is § 841(b)(1)(A) and (B).

C. Mr. Wayne prevails Using the Teague Analysis

Apprendi wrought a change in substantive law. Teague does not apply and retroactive application of Apprendi is automatic.

However, even if this Court utilizes the Teague analysis there remains no retroactivity bar to Mr. Wayne's first petition because situations such as the instant fit exactly into the exceptions of Teague. Teague provides that a new rule should be applied retroactively if it prohibits "a certain category of punishment for a class of defendants...." Graham v. Collins, 506 U.S. 461,477 (1993) This is exactly the situation which obtains here and a mirror image of that presented by Mr. Wayne's trial Judge, Hansen, who now sits on the Eighth Circuit and who wrote the Moss opinion.

Judge Hansen noted the unfairness which could obtain if Congress were to make all drug offenses subject to a maximum life sentence and then permit courts to apply the guidelines. He worries that those convicted under this "new" scheme would have no recourse while those who were convicted under the present scheme could use Apprendi to obtain relief. Yet his analysis leaves no recourse for those similarly situated to Mr. Wayne.

Had Wayne been awaiting trial in 2002, his Indictment would have been precise; the witnesses who testified against him would have been vigorously cross-examined on "weight" and their "recollections" of "about" thus and such could easily have been rejected by a rational jury.

If he were on direct appeal he could argue the Apprendi error. Judge Hansen does not want to create a unique class of people who are being punished more harshly than another class yet Moss does exactly that–those who are litigating their first 2255 are precluded from relief and, as the dissent in Moss states, the extra ten years in his case is dismissed as unworthy of addressing.

Further, even if Teague is to be applied, the "watershed" nature of Apprendi is patently apparent. This requires two elements: it must be implicit in the concept of ordered liberty" and "crucial to the accuracy of adjudication." (Graham at 478, quoting Teague, 489 U.S. at 311).

The Magistrate Judge found that Mr. Wayne's case fell under both exceptions to the Teague rule. The conviction was final; Apprendi constituted a new rule because it either "breaks new ground, 'imposes a new obligation on the States or the Federal Government,' or was not 'dictated by precedent existing at the time the defendant's conviction became final.'" Graham at 467 quoting Teague at 301).

A watershed rule must also speak to a bedrock principal essential to fairness. There is no question but that each circuit which had considered whether quantity of controlled substance was an "element" before Apprendi, held in the negative. Similarly, all are unanimously in accord that weight is an element of the crime which must be proven beyond-a-reasonable-doubt to a jury. (See cases gathered infra, at n.1).

Of course Apprendi cases present a consideration of the value of a jury and the utilization of a "beyond a reasonable doubt" standard to adjudicate elements of a crime. Courts have held that rules involving the reasonable doubt standard satisfy the reliability prong, while rules involving the jury trial guarantee satisfy the fundamental fairness prong of Cage v. Louisiana, 498 U.S. 39 (1990). Like Cage, Apprendi involves both the reasonable doubt standard and the jury trial guarantee and therefore implicates the accuracy and fairness of criminal proceedings.

Apprendi itself emphasized the sanctity of the reasonable doubt standard vis-a-vis sentencing enhancement analysis, noting that it was necessary to reduce the risk of taking a person's liberty without benefit of lawful process.

Apprendi reiterated that the Constitution guarantees a jury determination of each and every element of a crime and that to permit a judge to make such determinations departs from the Constitutional underpinnings of the right to a trial by jury.

C. The impact on the right to cross examine

It is unquestioned that cross examination of Government informant witnesses about quantity was a losing proposition for defense counsel and their clients because of the state of the law, pre Apprendi. It was irresponsible for a trial attorney to "haggle" with an informant about whether there were, for instance, two or three kilograms of cocaine in the box. By doing so he or she would be "admitting" that there were at least two kilograms and "admitting" to the crime.

This disincentive to cross-examine was patent in Mr. Wayne's case. Government witnesses rambled about their dealings and were so unreliable that the trial court dismissed two of the counts of conviction after learning that the witness had previously testified before this judge, questioned by this prosecutor, and swore that he kept no notes of his drug transactions. However, defense counsel ferreted out post-trial that the very drug ledgers which he "did not keep" which were in the hands of the Government which purported to utilize an "open file discovery" policy.

For any or all of these reasons, the Court should find that the Teague rule does not apply where an Apprendi error is at issue, or, in the lesser alternative, if it does apply, the rule of Apprendi falls within an exception to the Teague doctrine and may be applied retroactively to cases on collateral review."

D. Reasons underpinning Teague analysis fail in this case.

1. Finality

If this Court finds, consistent with the reasoning of various courts of appeal that an Apprendi error does not affect the underlying conviction but rather speaks to the imposition of a sentence under the "catch-all" provision of Title 21 U.S.C. § 841(b)(1)(C), there will be no impact on the finality of determinations of guilt, merely readjustment to a sentence consistent with a trial wherein the Government did not present evidence of quantity and where the court did not submit such evidence to the jury.

2 Juries and judges are the same when they consider evidence.

The Sanders, supra, court based its decision in part upon the reasoning that the result reached by juries and by judges would not be much different. This principle, carried to its logical conclusion, would permit judicial adjudication without benefit of trial. The Government is already successfully arguing that the failure to instruct the jury or the downright misleading the jury on an element of a crime is not such error as should bring vacation of a sentence. The substitution of a judge's determination–which seriously erodes Sixth Amendment concerns–should not be permitted.

II. Mr. Wayne presented issues of Constitutional importance–such as Governmental manipulation of Brady v. Maryland and of the discovery process and specific instances of ineffective assistance of counsel[5]--for which certificate of appealability was denied by both the district court and the Court of Appeals which mistakenly found that Mr. Wayne's objections to the magistrate's report were insufficiently specific to preserve them for review.

Title 28 USC, section 636 (b)(1), provides that a judge of the court shall make a de novo determination of those portions of the report or specified proposed findings or recommendations to which objection is made. Courts have interpreted this language as imposing a specificity requirement, "The filing of objections to the magistrate's report enables the district judge to focus attention on those issues – factual and legal – that are at the heart of the parties's dispute."[6]

[5]See Appendix 13a through 18a.

[6] Thomas v. Arn, 474 U.S. 140, 147 (1985)

Here, the disputed portion of objection to the report reads:

> [the report] denies Mr. Wayne's relief on his claims under Brady/Kyles; ineffective assistance of trial counsel, ineffective assistance of appellate counsel, and ineffective assistance of counsel relating to sentencing. Mr. Wayne has thoroughly briefed these issues for the Magistrate Judge and has participated in oral presentations as well. He would refer this Court to those presentations. He respectfully submits that errors of fact and law were made by the Magistrate Judge and that the Court erred when relief was not given on each of the aforementioned relief bases.

The district court refused to enlarge the certificate of appealability because it reasoned that prior arguments and submissions are not written objections to such findings and recommendations as contemplated by the rule, "precisely because such arguments and submissions were made before the magistrate judge ever filed proposed findings and recommendations."[7]

But other courts have found no such problems with incorporated submissions. In Kelly v. Withrow, the Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals directly addressed the sufficiency of objections that incorporate prior submissions by reference and, although not endorsing the practice, the court refused to bar Kelly's claims from review.[8]

K & B Equipment Co., Inc., 724 F.2d 511 (5th Cir. 1984)(an objection that incorporated an earlier more specific pleading was sufficiently specific to put the district court on notice of the urged error.); F.D.I.C. v. Zook Bros. Const. Co., 973 F.2d 1448 (9th Cir. 1992)(failure to object to magistrate judge's conclusions of law does not automatically bar raising objection on appeal, especially where both parties

It is respectfully submitted that to preserve a magistrate's adverse finding for review, the objection must be sufficiently specific to apprize the judge of specific areas of disagreement between the parties.

Here, the magistrate denied an evidentiary hearing, a circumstance that left Wayne unable to augment his earlier presentations and yet reluctant to merely reiterate them. Attempting to serve the specificity requirement's purpose, Wayne's objection listed the disputed grounds and incorporated by reference earlier submissions that discussed those grounds fully. The grounds are preserved and should have been visited by the trial court as well as by the Circuit.

Moreover, the term "specific" as it is used in section 636, has been interpreted to only require that a party specify each issue for which review is sought and does not call for a discussion of the factual or legal basis of the objection.[9]

In Beem v. McKune, supra, the Tenth Circuit considered certificates of appealability for two 2254 petitioners. That court stated that the standard, since the lower court had denied the certificate, was for the appellants to "demonstrate that reasonable jurists would find the district court's assessment of the constitutional claims debatable or wrong." citing to Slack v. McDaniel, 529 U.S. 473 (2000).

Mr. Wayne raised substantial constitutional issues (See Appendix 13a-18a) and none of those issues was considered by the district court because of what it termed the sufficiency of the objections. Since there had been no hearings, no evidence in affidavit or other form presented by the Government, there was nothing to add. Had Mr. Wayne been granted a hearing he would have testified consistent with the allegations in the moving papers. He was denied that opportunity.

As this Court recently reiterated, some issues which are not the subject of any objection can be considered. United States v. Vonn, 122 S.Ct.1043; 152 L.Ed.2d 90 (2002).

Instruction No. 13

You are instructed as a matter of law that cocaine is a schedule II narcotic controlled substance. You are also instructed as a matter of law that marijuana is a schedule I controlled substance. You must ascertain beyond a reasonable doubt whether or not the substances in question in this case were in fact cocaine and marijuana. In so doing, you may consider evidence in the case which may aid the determination of that issue.

The United States is not required to prove that the amount or quantity of cocaine and marijuana was as charged in the Indictment. It need only prove beyond a reasonable doubt that there was a measurable amount of cocaine and/or marijuana as charged in each respective count.

The undersigned has reviewed the foregoing judgment and it is approved as to form.

Assistant United States Attorney

ISSUES PRESENTED

GROUND ONE: The United States Attorney for the Northern District of Iowa suppressed evidence favorable to Petitioner, notwithstanding timely demand for discovery, and thereby obtained a conviction in violation of Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83,83 S.Ct. 1994,10 L.Ed. 2d 215 (1963), as further interpreted and clarified by Kyles v. Whitley, ___ US. ___, 115 S. Ct. 1555; 131 L.Ed. 2d 490 (1995) which must now be set aside.

GROUND TWO: Trial counsel rendered ineffective assistance of counsel in the following regards:

A. Counsel failed to ascertain the identity of all alleged conspirators and the scope and specific time frames of such alleged conspiracy, and the specific dates of the substantive charges.

B. Counsel failed to investigate and/or to interview witnesses who possessed relevant, material and/or exculpatory evidence which should have been introduced on Mr. Wayne's behalf at trial.

C. Counsel failed to seek from the court an order determining that the enforced secrecy clause of the informants' agreements violated Mr. Wayne's Sixth Amendment rights.

E. Counsel failed to move to dismiss this Indictment based upon the unlawful, obstructionist restriction on government witnesses and their total preclusion from interview by the defendant and others.

F. Counsel failed to demonstrate to the court that the allegations which were being tried as one conspiracy actually demonstrated the existence of multiple conspiracies, perhaps with overlapping membership, and failed to urge that the mere role of seller does not satisfy requirements for proof of knowing, willful intentional membership and participation in a conspiracy.

G. Counsel failed to investigate alibi defenses available to the Petitioner, notwithstanding that Petitioner suggested the availability and viability of such witnesses and of such a defense, and further failed to either obtain the return of the Petitioner's papers and books seized from the Petitioner's residence in order that these might be utilized to establish the alibi defense or to cause independent reconstruction of such records.

H. Counsel specifically failed to secure exculpatory evidence from alleged conspirator Larry Shreeves which was material and relevant to Mr. Wayne's innocence on the only substantive count of conviction though such was available from Mr. Shreeves or through others.

I. Counsel failed to investigate specific witnesses, alleged coconspirators including but not limited to Marcos Melendez, Pete Taylor and others and to secure theft presence as defense witnesses.

J. Counsel failed to independently test the cocaine packaging and to ascertain the identity of the fingerprints concededly found thereon.

K. Counsel failed to present expert witness testimony concerning the likelihood that the testimony of the government, drug user/addict witnesses, was tainted by their lack of perception, their lack of memory, particularity of detail, etc. due to the degradation of their brains from such drug use/addiction, hence their testimony was taken by the jury as if it were being recollected by a healthy non drug addict witness.

L. Counsel failed to object to alleged co-conspirator hearsay which came in through testifying informant witness Shelton.

M. Counsel failed to present a credible witness/former law enforcement officer, who had relevant, material impeaching information which went to the heart of the credibility of chief government witness Barton Hoffman.

N. Counsel failed to specifically demand information to which the defendant was entitled under Title 18 United States Code, Section 3500 subsequent to the testimony of all government witnesses, hence no 3500 material was produced and the defendant was forced to rely on his prior inspection and "note-taking" of miscellaneous, non numbered documents purporting to constitute the entirety of the discovery.

O. The court, at sentencing, was presented by the government ex parte and in camera certain information to which the Petitioner had sought access and which the Petitioner urged was relevant and material and which he further urged was knowingly withheld in violation of Brady v. Maryland, 373 U.S. 83(1963) and/or in violation of Title 18 Section 3500. Counsel was ineffective in that he did not seek to have the totality of the information which was reviewed by the court preserved for independent review by the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit.

P. Counsel sought the release of relevant portions of the confidential informants' presentence investigation reports. When the court, in spite of learning of the suppressed evidence on witnesses Hoffman, Newland, and Shelton, denied release of such information on witnesses other than Shelton, counsel did not seek to have the totality of those presentence investigative reports preserved for independent review by the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit. (Mr. Wayne refers this Court to the previous footnote).

Q. Counsel failed to seek release of the "discovery" produced in cases alleged against conspirators, particularly in light of the fact that the suppressed Hoffman notes which resulted in vacation of Counts 1 & 2 were allegedly contained in discovery for the case of a co-conspirator.

R. Counsel failed, after the Court's ruling on Barton Hoffman, to revisit the suppression issue in spite of the existence of law enforcement testimony that Barton Hoffman was the sole substantive affiant underlying the search warrant.

S. Counsel failed, after the Court's ruling on Barton Hoffman, to revisit his previously-made objections to the Pinkerton instruction; failed to urge that such information could not underlie a guideline sentencing enhancement for gun possession nor for role in the offense, i.e. Leader and Organizer.

T. Counsel failed to retain a guideline sentencing expert to assist in making all legal and factual challenges to the sentence(s) imposed though Petitioner sought such expert's retention and trial counsel in fact conceded his own lack of expertise in this area.

U. Counsel accepted as truthful and complete the excuse of the government for its hiding of discovery materials and failed to either cross examine the proffer of the government giving its "excuses" for non-compliance or to seek an evidentiary hearing at which time evidence would be required to be produced by the government under oath and subject to cross-examination.

V. Counsel failed to present ameliorating personal and medical evidence, which was readily available, to the trial court on the issues of Mr. Wayne's pre-guideline sentence and on the issue of the proper sentence to be imposed within the guideline range.

W. Counsel recognized that the court intended to impose separate guideline and non-guideline sentences and he nonetheless failed to urge upon the court the court's obligation to evaluate total punishment for the combined offense conduct and further failed to urge the court's consideration of the clear Congressional expression of public policy that several charges growing out of a single criminal episode should be encompassed in one sentence.

GROUND THREE: Appellate counsel rendered ineffective assistance of counsel in the following ways:

A. Counsel failed to ascertain the identity of all sealed, undocketed information and the unsealing of same.

B. Counsel failed to (1) ascertain whether the suppressed Barton Hoffman discovery materials reviewed by the trial court in camera had been preserved for review; and, if so, (2) failed to seek the unsealing of such documents and the independent review by the Appellate Court of whether said documents constituted information which should have been divulged by the government pursuant to its obligations under Brady or under the Jencks Act, or in the alternative failed to seek reconstruction and supplementation of the record to include such materials. (Mr. Wayne would cite the Court to Footnote 1).

C. Counsel failed to unseal the presentence investigation reports of admitted liar Barton Hoffman and of Newland in order to ascertain whether the trial court had been correct in withholding the specifically requested information from these reports–the government's version of the offense and the statements of those defendants.

D. Counsel failed to urge the Court of Appeals to reconsider the trial court's suppression determination and it's determination of the guideline enhancements of Leader and Organizer and possession of a firearm in light of the trial court's findings about the credibility of the sole substantive affiant, Barton Hoffman.

E. Counsel failed to argue the clear error of the trial court in its determination that it need not require that testimony sought to be introduced as coconspirator hearsay have been made during the course of and in furtherance of the conspiracy.

F. Appellate counsel failed to competently and completely address guideline and sentencing errors including the court's failure to respect the intent of Congress for true, effective, meaningful concurrency of sentences which reflect the total offense.

G. Appellate counsel conceded that other, extensive, pressing personal and legal business coupled with his own illness rendered the time available to him to prepare the appellate presentation on Mr. Wayne's behalf inadequate.

H. Appellate counsel never conferred with the Petitioner, and refused to consider, discuss and raise certain viable issues which the Petitioner wished raised.

I. Appellant's counsel was retained to seek Certiorari review of this matter before the United States Supreme Court and failed to do so.
